DEFINITION OF CAPITALISM:

An economic system in which investment in and ownership of the means of production, distribution, and exchange of wealth is made and maintained chiefly by private individuals or corporations, especially as contrasted to cooperatively or state-owned means of wealth.

CHAPTER I:

EARLY BEGINNING

Ever since I was younger my parents always looked for me to be the next star football or basketball player professional. Not knowing all the shit that comes with being a good or somewhat descent athlete I agreed. I agreed since this seems to be the most glorious careers growing up even though I never knew why. Seems that doctor or lawyer was right behind these choices but as a young kid it took a while to notice that it was all because of wealth.

Growing up brainwashed to chase money was not my thing. I wanted to have fun play video games (Atari, Nintendo, Sega) I could've cared less about any of that shit my parents wanted me to be. But every morning at 6am they reminded me with the need to get off my butt and try to make something of myself and go to school.

I hated school except for the girls there. P.E. was fun and so was lunch, yet everything else seemed to be some sort of curse or some drama that I had little to know interest in. Just think, an 8 year old that wants to learn history, math English or how to read. You got to be kidding!

That what they brainwashed us into thinking we wanted. But as my parents beat the crap out of me yearly, I quickly gained a C or B average just to keep them happy. Overall school was not my favorite pass time, but I learned that I need school to see the women and also to get money in order to get the women. The irony.

So, I went from 1st grade all the way till 12th grade doing exactly what my parents wanted me to do. Yes, I wanted to grow up and be somebody someday, being a loser was not an idea that I could've accepted. During my last year of high school I picked up a job working at mickey D's and to tell you the honest truth, that job sucked even more along with the minimum wage I earned. The only good thing about working for Ronald mc Donald was the free food.

So, after I finished school I thought about returning back to my temporary job I had at the golden arches but the whopper shop down the road was paying a hell of a lot more and it was much closer. Not including the hours were great. So they hired me.

Right off the bat I loved my job, not to say that I only wanted to flip burgers but I like the food and it allowed me to take some college courses at night that made my schedule perfect. So after 6 months working there and after about 1000 cheeseburger's I digested, the burger shop started to get old after a while.

Finishing college really started to seem like an impossible mission. I wanted change. I begin to ask myself why does life have to be so difficult. Why can't I have been born to a rich family...

This is when I quickly learned what capitalism was all about and why at times it seemed a rich man's heaven is a poor man's hell. Not all the time, but in a lot of cases. Capitalism was a huge smack in my face. At least I can say I learned something going to college even though I took an early leave.

I quickly learned what capitalism was all about and why at times it seemed a rich man's heaven is a poor man's hell.

So I stuck to the kitchen, I know I wanted to continue with my classes but for the cost of tuition along with the cost of car repairs I quickly had to managed to keep the car running. There was no way I would've been able to go to work and school at the same time. Work paid for my school, and I needs a car to get to school, so I was stuck between a rock and a hard place.

No big deal, I can always go to summer school, besides they are talking about promoting me to manager. I worked harder with the influence of the possibility if doubling my salary and having some extra time to myself. This unfortunately never happen, in fact the manager that was supposed to leave to work at a new restaurant, however that didn't happen and he end up staying and becoming an even bigger Dick Tracy.

I did my thing of course, no speed bump in my style, I worded saved money and gained about 15 pounds due to working overtime in a kitchen full of grease.

This was my life for several months until one day my cousin decided to drop by, and pick me up for my birthday. We went out drinking, stop by a couple of strip clubs and had the best time of my life. I had to work the next day, so we ended up staying out only till 2am. I thanked him for showing me a good time, but I couldn't help but to ask him, how was he able to afford our full night of lap dances. At $20 a pop, it seemed strange that after 10 songs, we could've easily blazed through $200 yet he didn't even flinch.

He told me the business as a taxi driver was pretty good around this time of year. He said I should give it a shot. They are looking for more guys to work the later shift. My cuz gave me a 15 minute run down of how the gig works and gave me the address to apply. He told me to show up with a pair of slacks, a button up shirt and some black shoes, no tie preferred.

I went there at 8am to apply, and his manager was glad to see me show up. It said a lot to the business when family are referring their family to work for him. He hired me and told me I can work in 2 weeks if I needed to give my current employer a leave of absence. I did.

I told my manager that I was done. He asked If I could work a couple more weeks until he found a replacement. As much as I wanted to tell him no, I said yes. They found a replacement after a few days and I quickly returned to taxi shop.

Training was for 2 weeks to get to know the system the routes and safety guidelines. Including a drug test to make sure I was clean, good thing my cousin told me to drink a gallon of water per day before I went to the doc.

So there I was, as a new taxi driver. I felt free. Just going out there in the market as basically a sub-contractor. My schedule was great and freedom was like a dream come true. I actually like it. The pay in tips at times were cool, but sometimes these joe's only pushed me a one dollar bill. But to each it's on, my pay average out to a little over a hundred and fifty bucks per day, much better than working 12 hours and being told what to do for far less pay.

CHAPTER 2:

THE TAXI BUSINESS

Nobody really cares about the taxi business, and to be honest it's really quite basic. I mean can you drive a freaking car? Yes, then you're good! So from that stand point qualifying isn't so bad, now you just got to follow directions, respect people, follow the law and make shit load of money. That's it!

So for most getting your feet wet with a little yellow bus is fine, but now there are services that allows for the middle man to be cut out of the picture called Uber.

I would like to point out that when you meet someone whether a taxi driver, accountant, chef, doctor etc. your perception of them is about 80-90 percent correct.

Uber is fine, but at times there are a few obstacles that may get in the way, however this guide book is not about the services of taxis, this is about how to become rich, and become a taxi driver is not one of them. At least from the fundamental stand point, you're not going to be raking in a million dollars per year in tips, and nothing close to the neighborhood of anything in the 6 figure category so, I think it's important to keep this clear.

But I would like to point out that when you meet someone whether a taxi driver, accountant, chef, doctor etc. your perception of them is about 80-90 percent correct.

So socializing with someone that you may find intriguing is a plus, but we must point out that they also must find you the same in order to allow dialog to go in the proper direction.

Socializing with a taxi driver is amazingly convenient and for the most part, it allows you to meet someone that you may haven't met before. I have found that the conversation gets even more thicker once you have been in the cab with each other more than once.

Yep, the chance that you both see each other again is not the most rarest meetups but it does happen. And when it happens, all hands on deck. You can really get quite comfortable with each other. See what happens is the normality or the humanity starts to sink in. The person riding shotgun or in the back seat gets to realize that this person is normal. This person is just a person just like me.

The more the two, passenger and driver starts to see each other as normal human beings, the better chance the two have at hiding it off. No homo.

But let's keep this real. The conversation opens up and bingo, you two are friends unlike any other. Now this is golden, but what happens in a scenario when the odds are not exactly on your side.

This is when the act of communicating really need to be a little bit more advance. Now if you are not the type that like to communicate with or without strangers, then this may not be the best route for you. To become rich, it takes communication. Not just basic communication or forceful communication, but communication that is natural and no holds bar.

Yeah, you really got to say what's on your mind but yet be mindful of respect the person you are with. The person likes honesty, even if it's not the best feeling. Apologize if you may offend, or even go further say something in advance like, "I hope I don't offend anyone" disclaimer. This is a great sign of respect and allows them to know you are a real Mother f----r.

Allowing them to see this can get you quite far. They want to be around real people and also around people that respects and are considerate of others. So starting off a conversation or a statement or two with that disclaimer is at times the best advice you can get.

Plus, they do this a lot in New York. New York has to be one of the most honest mind spoken places I've been. Hurt feelings or not, these people say exactly what they are thinking. Not sure how it got this way, but they definitely keep it real in the Big Apple.

So yes, this is the usual. More than likely they have heard the truth a thousand times, yet when a complete stranger tells them what's up, they take it as a plus, and it allows the dialog to be in both parties favor. We all like when someone tells us what they think about him or her even when most people are too scared or shy to say it. Self-improvement can go quite far, and when you meet someone new, say what you think, you want to come off as an alpha male or female. These types of people command more respect and normally get it. Also the biggest plus is the millionaire that may be riding in the back seat won't monkey around with you when they are revealing the best kept secrets.

A liar (salesman) always can see another salesman from a mile away. So expose your skills, but do not give away your selling tactics. Allow them to show their hand first, even when you may not have one.

CHAPTER 3:

UNDERSTANDING PERSONALITIES

The "big five" are broad categories of personality traits. While there is a significant body of literature supporting this five-factor model of personality, researchers don't always agree on the exact labels for each dimension. However, these five categories are usually described as follows:

1. Extroversion is characterized by excitability, sociability, talkativeness, assertiveness and high amounts of emotional expressiveness. People who are high in extroversion are outgoing and tend to gain energy in social situations. People who are low in extroversion or introversion tend to be more reserved and have to expend energy in social settings.
2. Agreeableness personality dimension includes such as trust, altruism, kindness, affection and other prosocial behaviors. People who are high in agreeableness tend to be more cooperative while those low in this trait tend to be more competitive and even manipulative.
3. Conscientiousness involves standard features of this dimension include high levels of thoughtfulness, with good impulse control and goal-directed behaviors. Those high on conscientiousness tend to be organized and mindful of details.
4. Neuroticism is a trait characterized by sadness, moodiness and emotional instability. Individuals who are high in this trait tend to experience mood swings, anxiety, moodiness, irritability and sadness. Those low in this trait tend to be more stable and emotionally resilient.
5. Openness trait features characteristics such as imagination and insight, and those high in this trait also tend to have a broad range of interests. People who are high in this trait tend to be more adventurous and creative. People low in this trait are often much more traditional and may struggle with abstract thinking. It is important to note that each of the five personality factors represents a range between two extremes. For example, extraversion represents a continuum between extreme extraversion and extreme introversion. In the real world, most people lie somewhere in between the two polar ends of each dimension.

For now, I will discuss a very unique way of looking at personalities.

This would be based off of how someone carry themselves along with how they dress during certain times of the day, certain times of the year and when with certain type of company. These times and days says a lot about how people see them. Some wealthy people are pretty strung out on brands, while some can care less.

With this being said, the brand name folks are typically the ones we are discussing at the moment because they are typically the narcissists and stick out like a sore thumb. The challenge with narcissist's people is that they often tend to lie about their wealth or make people think they are wealthier than which they really are. A fool and its money do part ways, so find out how this one became rich, you may be able to reinvest the wealth they make on making more wealth versus material items. In fact they may work for you in the future.

Most of the time they want people to see them as someone they are not, however someone they would like to be. A narcissists can take hours to prepare to get ready and you will find them spending a lot of time online or using their phone so that way they can be on the up and up on certain brands.

The internet really has allowed them to paint a picture of their life without anyone know the truth behind who they really are. These type of people will go as far as buying brand name clothing with the tags still attached, take 100's of selfies with these clothes and then return them to the store.

If this sounds like somebody you know then there is a good chance they are a narcissists. The reason why I brought this up is because the challenge with identifying a millionaire using the book cover strategy can at times be a challenge. You can't always judge the cover by what someone is truly bringing home in income.

For this reason you want to try to focus on the content. Look at the wear and tear of their watch and other permanent items. If these items have some usage and wear and tear, there is a good chance that the person is legit and is not typically fronting or pretending to be wealthy. We call this old money.

Word of advice is to look at the face of their watch. The face of their watch should not have any scratches, yet the band of the luxury items should show scratches, or wear and tear scars. This is usually a good sign. If they don't own a watch, look for the shoe brand and make sure the shoes are top brand if the rest of their clothes is. Wear and torn up shoes and top name clothes is a good sign that they like quality yet can care less what people think of them. These are typically the whales (rich/wealthy).

Now that you can identify the brand name wearing folks, it's time to dig into the ones that don't care about labels.

When you see people, throughout the day there is a sudden strong element of clothes people can typically wear be it business or casual. The business clothes are a true give away for some. Most people that is wearing suit and tie are typically not the ones in a power or control position.

Business clothes are not comfortable and if you look at how Bill Gates or Mark Zuckerberg dresses throughout the day it tells you that this is very true. A CEO will never be able to help you become a millionaire, they are busy getting paid from the shareholders and the price of the stock.

Getting some millionaire confessions from guys with suits will not help you. A suit is to help present yourself to a buyer or seller. In this case you do not have much power or leverage, this is why you are trying to look your best.

A CEO will never be able to help you become a millionaire, they are busy getting paid from the shareholders and the price of the stock.

I hate to say never, but don't spend much time with guys in suits or business clothes, all this would ever do is get you working for someone else. Now as I mentioned this, it doesn't necessarily mean to completely cut them off from conversation or learning a certain market but I wouldn't focus on confessions from them in particular, they normally have nothing to confess about that will help you become wealthy.

A hole in the pants, shirt or shorts is not a bad thing. This is typically a good thing because they are not ashamed of how they look they are usually only interested in how much money they are making or saving. We highly recommend looking for guys that have the worst looking outfit combination as possible. The worst the outfit combo the more than likely he dressed himself and does not have a wife or girlfriend, nor does he care too.

Focus driven guys are the best in terms of learning secrets, the challenge is trying to find out if this torn jeans, hole in the shirt old sneaker wearing Joe is really bringing in the bread. It can be a challenge but this is why nothing in life is easy or free.

But I would like to give you a secret regarding the guys with these non-brand clothing, their time is precious. They are very critical to being on time and they can be quite tempered if they are late. They focus on the time and don't like to waste 1 minute. Time is money for them, and they typically do want you to get there promptly but not too promptly.

You will also find that these types are not detail orientated, and they also have bad handwriting. The handwriting can be tough to spot out when you first meet someone, however most millionaires and billionaires hate to write anything. They don't mind signing their name yet they hate to write. Reading is something that is completely different, they will read the fine print and at times ignore the bold.

These are just some qualities to look for when in search of the book cover strategy as you determine or guesstimate someone's wealth.

CHAPTER 4:

NEW YORK PASSENGERS

There are people of all shape and sizes and at times it really doesn't too much matter how skinny or fat; there will always be some wealthy Joe wanting to go somewhere in the Big Apple. Most customers would just hop in the back seat and ask to be taken to their destination, and some will hop in the back and ask where something is located and how long will it take to get there. These are typically foreigners. The foreigners that are travelling to New York is a good thing at times they normally like to hold a conversation and usually are quite friendly.

I normally kept the communication going for this is usually a way to get them to open up. The pace of the conversation is important, you can kind of feel them out depending on their mood, as they always were able to feel me out as well.

Allow them to know you are friendly, however it may not be such a bad thing if they were to hand you a business card that may put you ahead in the future. That being said, I wouldn't too much focus on the foreigners, they are focused too much on you, they tend to want to get to where they are going and are quite distracted from their new surroundings.

This is typical and it's important to not take this into offense if they aren't too social, I normally just played along with them and was waiting for a pretty good dollar tip.

Now that we got the foreigners out of the way, allow us to get back to the focus. I had a key strategy to look for people that look like they lived in New York, tourists are usually the ones I bypassed for they at times may not too much care for anything and talks about nothing. The single guys standing alone was a huge plus. Usually if they carried something, the smaller the better.

A coffee or latte means that they are focus driven and there is a good chance they are wide awake. The coffee holders are great. Try to look for these, they love to socialize and are normally pretty wise on making money even if it is not millions.

The biggest reason to keep the eye on the customers that are standing alone is because they typically are open to reveal their secrets when the conversation is one-on-one. Yes, going for the couples may be cute, but that does not help you get the big nickel.

For example when couples are in the cab, they typically keep the conversation under wrap. The last thing you want to do is share your information with outsiders when the secret conversation is supposed to be secret. At times the person they are riding with already know the secret and don't really want you revealing the information to others. This is true.

So should you turn down talking to people that are not alone? No, you can still communicate with couples, we just don't suggest you doing this if you are wanting to get the GOOD data that so many others tend to get.

Most personalities regardless of who they are or try to be wont share the goodies, if they are good. The goodies that are good will stay under wrap until they find someone good enough to share it with. Even money at times cannot buy the goods, some things just aren't for sale.

So I typically target the wealthy looking customers, and at times I get frowned at for discrimination but to be honest I do not reject people who are less fortunate, I just tend to go to locations where there are more wealth and more chance to make money. Capitalism is still legal in the United States.

CHAPTER 5:

THE BACK SEAT

This is how and where I made my bread. If you just go about your job just by going about your job, your life and your pay will be as dull as your personality. So it's critical to get some coffee, eat healthy and prepare yourself for a life of happiness.

The back seat of my taxi and how I treated my customers had to be 5 star. Yes, you can get away with 1, 2, 3 or even 4 stars but why would you? At times, some people do not want the 5 star service because they think you expect a tip, even though you are just being generous. So yes, five star service just depends on how you handle yourself.

Remember the earlier note about disclaimer. I always like to tell people that no tip needed and this allowed them to bring their guard down, and think of me as a generous guy instead of someone that wants to smooch over a few dollars. Most people think if you wash their back you expect for them to wash your back in return.

While this may be true in a lot of cases, it's ever more important in the tip market to tell them upfront that you don't expect or need a tip, even though they end up tipping you because of who you are and not for what you are. Ch-Ching!

So off to so my thing, which of course involves driving and talking, how difficult can life be. The gig did come with some road rage, so yes, that is included with my salary and long hours. For now we will just discuss what the conversation entails in order to maximize the profits and gather data.

See with wealthy people, at times they think we are broke, poor, or homeless. Some think we are downright stupid to be working a blue collar job and therefore frown down at us or at times treats us with no respect at all.

So this is sometimes the norm, so if you are immune to this then you are two steps head. For those that are not, it's important to know that we live in a world of capitalism shared by supply and demand. If they don't see you as important it's nothing personal, it's about supply and demand.

Capitalism is about the survival of the fittest. If you are strong, your strength will shine through, if you are weak, this will also be noticeable even though mentally and physically you are strong.

Capitalism is about the survival of the fittest. If you are strong your strength will shine through, if you are weak, this will also be noticeable even though mentally and physically you are strong, but perhaps in the world of capitalism you are weak due to the fact that you are not in the same tax bracket as the wealthy.

This can be an ego barrier for some, and for others they know how to use the ego to gather data. 90% of wealthy people love to have their butt kissed and if you can kiss it and do so in private without anyone noticing then you are more than likely to succeed and will prosper.

It's ok at times to resist the temptation but know for one thing that they can at times see right through a lot of people, they do have somewhat of a descent IQ.

The challenge or difficulty at times is the fact that wealth people see you as not the same if you're not the same. For this, my tips were smaller from them. They didn't have much sympathy for blue collar folks so they did not feel the need to constantly pay out large amount of cash for services as simple as driving.

This is cool, because as this guide explains, it's important to focus on the big nickel versus the other smaller coins. The wealthy Joe's that got in my back seat did talk and brag about their performances. You at times have to know how to accept this bragging. The bragging is important. Listen to what they say, repeat these numbers back to them as they want to make sure you are listening.

If they tell you they made 520 thousand dollars last year, you tell them that is over 40 grand per month. Let them know you are quick with math and you have accepted their income as some amazing. Then you tell them something humble like that's how much you make in a year.

Keep them wet and allow them to expose the truth. Become a fan first then a friend second. The information will come to you as long as if you're good with opening up the conversation. Keeping thing open and the dialog fresh unforced and healthy is important when communicating.

When getting these millionaires to confess it's important to know when to ask questions, so paying attention to details is critical. They will spill the beans on how they make their money as long as you ask them correctly. Asking these questions at the right time is the up most key to getting data.

I like to ask them what separates them from other people in the same field, or why normal guys in their industry can't bank it like they do. Keep them giving. They will give as long as they see that you are harmless and see you as a friend.

Yes, the proof will also show in the tips they provide. If the tip is small, then of course they still see you as the little guy. If the tip is big or generous than they see you as a normal joe or someone like them and don't mind helping you out with an immediate thank you gift, but these big immediate thank you tips slash gifts are also coated with the fact that they did not give you the butter, or the goodies in order to make millions.

Don't worry, these things take time and practice and for most you will improve as time goes by. In fact you may be surprised that when interview these wealthy people, that they will at times offer their business card. This is fine, however I do not suggest calling it unless they tell you to give them a ring.

My best advice would be to send an email if the email is worthy of being sent.

CHAPTER 6:

DISCUSSING PERSONALITIES

With all these different types of personalities jumping in the back of the cab, we always find a good time to discover that not only did most wealthy people are horrible tippers, but we found that a lot of them are quite frugal. Being frugal is not necessarily a bad thing, in fact in order to stay a player and reach for the stars your outlook on any type of cost setting is to buy low sell high. This also includes cutting all unnecessary expenses.

It may sound silly but a taxi services in most of their eyes is a luxury expense. Yes, taking a bus or walking is more in their eyes a better way to travel in terms of limiting expenses. We found many millionaires also ride bikes to work when the weather isn't bad.

Yes, they are hard cheap saving penny pinching bastards! But that's not my problem that typically what other people say. But this is a good lesson that helped me along the way to not be lazy. Capitalism doesn't wait for laziness and we believe everyone should take this to heart when after all there are some people working 12-14 hour days.

It is a luxury to work less and therefore working smarter is more efficient than working harder. The world would work you literally to death if you allow the world to do this. The best thing to do is to avoid this by allowing yourself to prosper off of new renowned strong better financial goals using smarter sound strategies. And this is why getting these confessions is key to finally getting a head and being rich.

Reaping profits upfront may be a great quick way to get ahead tomorrow however it necessarily won't get you ahead a few months from now. As I picked up my first few millionaires I thought more about what they were doing to get to where they made it versus why didn't he or she give me more money in tips.

See it's all too important to make sure you are aiming for the right goal before pulling the trigger. You can cut yourself very short if you are short sighted or if you attempt to judge every book by its cover. As mentioned earlier you can get away with this up to a certain percent of individuals but you may just as easily pre-judge incorrectly, which is a direct result of being lazy which can be painful in the wonderful world of capitalism.

Since most of the people that rode in my back seat were men, women also had their way of communicating. I have to be honest most women often discussed with you a little bit more frequent than men for the simple fact that women love to talk.

The challenge with them was always keeping them on course versus steering off into something that didn't really matter. Yes, women made money as well, not as much as men did, but to my surprise they are also banking in millions of dollars per year. And while they are not necessarily bringing the money themselves at times their husbands are.

The at times have a wonderful way of finding the money just like I did, communicating. Yes, you can look at it as a way of flirting, but women have an amazing way of fooling the opposite sex into thinking they are a God. Women can easily blow your whistle and have a drive to make sure you are the king of the mountain regardless of how much money you make. True actresses.

So can we blame them women for not making all the bread? No, not if someone is making the bread for them. The king of the safari is the Lion yet, he has the female lions hunt and bring home the meat while he sits around waiting for food and sex. This is a reverse.

So at times men should protest for equal rights of sitting on their assets, getting screwed while the women bring home the bacon. Probably not in this lifetime, but I must admit men are dying from stress and heart related illnesses every day, it's time that we need a vacation.

So getting back on track, the females do have the knowledge and the knowhow to bring home the cheddar, yet what is it that will allow you to discover their creative ways in becoming wealthy. The women that we've come across are pretty close mouth about the secrets, unless you can convince them to open both lips.

From this discussion we are simply going to try to focus on what I always focused on which are the 1 percenters, men.

Some blame it on the reaction time, yet for others men just are more desperate and thirstier to make it happen at times versus women. While this can be quite damaging to the health and your wellbeing, it is this drive that allows the bulk of people to pursue happiness and purchase millionaire confessions.

Nobody wants to work hard for it, especially when you have 20 year old billionaires that never finished college. Go figure that. Now, some may say life is fair, but then when you add in currency things get cloudy, even though some men tend to have more Testosterone and some more estrogen, regardless of this fact, their personalities is typically focused on earning more money and power than anything else.

Nobody wants to work hard for it, especially when you have 20 year old billionaires that never finished college.

CHAPTER 7:

CONFESSIONS

One of my first big time rider's was from a cat that was in his late 60's. All I kept thinking was, why in the world would anyone still be working at that age, but then again I noticed that he didn't work. Yes, he was dressed with a tie a pair of slack and some three hundred dollar pair of kicks but that's not the point.

This guy smelled like money spoke well and was insanely manicured. Hair, nails, speech, vocabulary was something you may hear from someone that owned a PHD, however he had no degree. He said he became educated and well-mannered by just being around these type of people. So I asked what type of people and why would he be around this class of folks. And this is when he started to spill the details of his business.

He went into how he owns a printing company that charges people for ink. And I though we lived in a paperless world, however he said that his company never touches the ink yet he buys it wholesale from India and china and then resells it wholesale. So yes, technically he doesn't work. He basically signs papers and documents on a week to week basis. I thought that was pretty cool even though he hadn't yet told me the actually amount of money he made.

I later that night I went home to configure some numbers he provide with contracts. I figured at 345,000 dollars in ink deals per month means that his profit had to be at least 10-20% on a conservative basis. He sold ink to Office Depot, Office Max, Kinko's and even DuPont. The ink business is one the highest margin businesses out there because people are paying for products that they need immediately. It's actually a need not a want.

Roger Pakel was his name. We spoke for about a half hour before I dropped him off at his location but he asked me if I ever wanted a job, to look him up.

Who would've figured that something behind the scenes that we never even think about can reap such huge profits, but then I thought about the peanut business. I never picked up anyone that sold peanuts but then, you have to look at the awkward saying when people say, "he is making peanuts" which at times depending on what level you are selling and the quantity can actually make you a millionaire, just saying...

Yes, the markets globally can put out some interesting markets, yet the reason why people are reading this guide is they want in at the cheapest start-up price they can find. And of course things has not changed it still costs money to start a business, and time to get it running, but as we go along you need to make sure you have what it takes to allow yourself to capitalize on what industry you decide to go in.

We will point out more niches as we discuss some confessions.

For example there was this time close to New Year's Eve when prices of taxi service and everything else gets a little crazy. The temperature was mad cold yet there was this one guy that had one just a short sleeve shirt and a pair of blue white khakis.

The first thing I thought was this guy must be nuts, homeless or mentally challenged. I think it was around 20 degrees outside, so I though let me ask if this guy needs a ride. As I pulled over he says heck yes I need a ride.

I asked him, where is the rest of your clothes? He said that He hates to carry luggage and that is flight leaves in an hour and that he's heading to the Bahamas. I said 1 hour? There is now way you're going to make that flight, traffic this time of the year is nuts.

He laughed and said yeah you are typically right, in fact if I was riding commercial I probably need to leave 3 hours ahead of time due to TSA. Cha! Ching!

I said, so you're not flying commercial he said no and that he was mad that he had to go all the way back home because he forgot his passport, his private jet is waiting at the airport. I was like whoa!

I have a true whale in the back. I paused for a moment and thought this is where I would like to be. Leaving this cold awful weather and heading to the tropical land of the West Indies.

He said yeah, he loved his job and that he wouldn't trade it for the world. I was thinking neither would I?

So on the way to the airport, he asked me to roll down the window a little bit, I was like its freezing are you kidding, and he was like no. So I rolled it down a little bit, he said can I do the other, I said sure, but are you hot?

He said not really, but when he gets to the Bahamas he wants to really appreciate the great weather he wants to remember what he worked so hard for. I said that is a great way to think of it. So as we are the only car driving around with the window down, I had to ask him the magic words, "so what do you do for a living?" He said that he's into the Mother Nature. I was like Mother Nature as far as having sex?

He said no, predicting the cost of heating oil depending on what Mother Nature says. I was like huh?

But he continued and explained that the commodity business of buying and selling and the right times depending on the cost of oil and how long the winter will be. Basically meteorology. He explained that it's the commodity market that controls the meteorologist forecast and not the other way around.

So how about that? I met the people that control the weather. But not exactly. The weather info that you read on the news is not accurate, in fact at times it is about 1 month behind the real data. The best is about 1 week behind. So as you may watch the news expecting the weather to be xyz, it's actually abc.

The way the commodity market and its speculators (buyers, sellers) rely on prices depending on what information the local news companies provide. If you know who provides the meteorologist the information then you can predict the price of heating oil. Information is key.

I didn't need to know how much he was banking, but the confession alone told me that he is deep in the game strong enough to have his private jet, and he left me with one more thing, he told me that information costs money. He has to pay a premium for accurate weather forecasts.

So, like we mentioned yes you may have to pay to play in most circumstance, it can be labelled as a business expense.

This was one of the second guys I can think of that was a true eye opener to the millionaire market and makes me feel that everything going forward is going to push me forward as long as I take good notes.

So for now we will keep it moving in regarding the back seat. As the winter was finally warming up a bit, I couldn't help but to find other money makers that were in the game of raking it huge shipments of cash and yes the tips were halfway decent, not a lot but it kept me busy and I was able to at least pay some bills.

For the most part the budget chauffer was paying off, now I just need more info. It's coming, and I can feel it. These guys were super loaded and picking up my 3rd whale was cool. Now some other were probably whales however it became know that for the most part some may have either been anti-social or wasn't game to talk to a guy making minimum wage plus tips. But fair is fair.

I picked up a guy by the name of Mike Frasier. Now mike was the typical booshie douche bag, up temple arrogant looking queer. But that's cool I am an equal opportunity driver and I didn't matter if someone dresses or carry themselves as long as they are bringing in the dough. And man did he bring it in...

The button up polo with a scarf around the neck told me just to keep the conversation to a minimum, but I couldn't help but to notice he had a diamond crusted iPhone. So I had to ask and I mentioned that is a pretty nice phone. He replied thanks. I then dug in, that I had purchased some diamond ear ring for my girlfriend that would go very well with his phone.

He was like "oh really," what carats was the stone. I told him it was about 1 carat total, something cheap. He told me that his was a total of 10 carats. I was like real 10 carats on your phone, he showed me a Samsung model that was 12 carats.

The shit was wild, so I was like wow, how can anyone afford this kind of phone. He smiled, and said that he gets it all for free. I was floored, and then I said no really, how can anyone afford that, which I was really trying to dig a little deeper in salary to have him confess at the same time trying to suck up to the queer to make him think that I really care about material stuff.

After trying to freaking flirt with me he finally coughed up and said that he is a wholesale diamond expert. Whatever that means. But the bottom line was the fact that he was at least talking. But I wanted more or did I? So he went into it explained that he serves a pretty strong high profile celebrity bunch and that if I know anyone, he can give me some kickbacks on commission. I said hmm ok.

But he kept pushing and pushing the idea, even though I don't exactly know anyone that is into diamonds for the most part, but then again, I meet people every day. I assumed he/she knew this. So I said what if I were to sell one of these diamonds your talking about what kind of numbers would we be talking about.

He gave me some pretty big numbers that seemed too hard to be true. But I played along, until he told me that he made close to 37k dollars last month and he's only been selling diamonds for 6 months. Now that is impressive.

Somebody that made a truck load of money and been in the game for less than 1 year. But, of course I know that at times people can be lucky, until he told me how he finds his clients. He goes after Amway and Mary Kay sellers and offer them referral deals with kickbacks that they can't resist.

Pretty smart being that most of these people work by referral and they clientele base is pretty loyal. I was impressed. Not to say that I have any kind of interest in selling diamonds but the fact that his create clever business skills were above the average. By the way he told me that last month was his 2nd slowest months he had.

You can take it for what it's worth, it's hard to tell if his income was accurate, however the jewels on his phone was real and so was his pink business card. I didn't really aim for this confession, part of the confession was part of his marketing strategy. He may not be a millionaire, however at his pace, it won't be long. Take it for what it's worth.

So of course here in the Big Apple you meet all kinds of people with multiple personalities regardless of their true character.

So riding in the cab had its benefits, and for the most part, it kept me busy, slim and eager to make it like the guys that I sometimes picked up on a week to week basis. So it's nice, being that my life and job is not boredom, I actually have a good time even though some people can be total jerks. But, I take the good with the bad.

Things were getting even more gooder. For once I tailored my routes to pick up customers that were alone looking for a ride. No family or women allowed. These guys were giving away so much data that it was like a miracle. One of the best clients I picked up was this guy who was a construction contractor.

He worked in a super nice high rise hotel in the middle of down town and was super smooth when it comes to wheeling and dealing. I still haven't found anyone as sly as he was in terms of being ahead of the game. It all started around 7 O'clock in the afternoon when I saw him alone flagging down every taxi he can see yet everyone had passengers.

Fortunately mine was empty, so I pulled over and asked where ya going. He told me upstate. As he got into the car, he immediately asked me what time it was, and I politely told him 7: 15. Being that everyone I've met in the last 5 years own a cell phone I had to ask, what happen to your phone?

He replied that he hasn't had the time to go out and purchase one himself, and that his assistant has one. I asked your assistant? What kind of work do you do? He mentioned that he in construction. At first I didn't believe him for the simple fact that living out west for a long time exposed me to a lot of people in construction. Yet, these were Mexicans that were in the physical labor of building houses.

Residential construction is big, yet regardless, this guy was doing commercial. I don't know a thing about residential or commercial really, but I can notice that this guy was raking in so much bread that he can afford his assistant to carry his cell phone for him. Big Baller!

So I dug a little more, as he kept bragging about how he constantly win building contracts, I had to take notes and check to make sure that the recorder was still fully functioning because this stuff was getting good. Finally a whale that made the bread, and did it in an industry that is not over saturated.

An industry that I can get in and get my feet wet after I try to learn the basics. At least that is what he told me...

So I couldn't get this guy to stop talking. I mean, I'm not complaining because it helps my day go by faster and I want as much info as possible. So I gathered that he actually wins his contracts because he already know what the bidder is going to bid before the auction begins.

Having some web crackers that hack sites and emails is the most morale thing to do in anything with business. Secondly hacking or wiretapping phone lines was a little bit above my skill and knowledge level, but this guy was making close to a million dollars every single month.

I mean if you're making this kind of bread, why wouldn't you hire someone to help you make more. He did. I was talking to a dirty filthy dude that goes over and above to make sure he wins. I asked myself, "is this how the world works"?

Then again I took the logic of the FBI and CIA that cheats to get ahead of the criminal. I mean, if Law enforcement use these methods to get ahead of the curve, why can't millionaires?

Well, I can tell you why, because they are the only ones allowed to legally use these methods, for them it's not immoral or wrong, its right. At least that's what they tell you in court after they find out that you are copying their tactics.

So he was banking it, and I was amazed that he revealed all of this too me. I mean it seemed illegal. So why would he disclose this information to a complete stranger. Or was I? Yes, the conversation was kind of heavy, and I know I can come off kind of friendly but how can he conveniently give me the bread and butter especially if it's stolen.

And this is when I did my note taking and re-winded the recorder that said he doesn't do the dirt himself he just pays for the information. Basically there is a syndicate of individuals that can get him anything he wants for a certain price. And the price he paid. Because in reality he was dealing with millions of millions of dollars. One successful deal can easily net him 2 million dollars.

So of course paying 10 grand to get what he wanted was no big deal. I total 20000% return on his investment on a conservative side. Because he also told me about the referrals that he gets because of how good he pays his people to do good work.

Wow, I was taken back by all of it. And I was lucky to get what I needed. For safety reasons I cannot divulge information on a certain underground syndicate that taps phones and emails, however there are hundreds of them on line, you just have to look for the right forums.

I felt a little dirty just telling people about this cat, yet the truth is the truth and even though he wasn't the one doing the dirt, he funded it. Some will say that the dirt will always be around as long as capitalism is here. So does capitalism equal dirt? Some would say in it's rawest form it does and others would say in a fair business format, capitalism is not dirty, and that's of course if big brother is watching, looking down your back to make sure you are doing clean honest business.

In this case, it should not be considered capitalism, but maybe something else. That my friend, is not our concern. Our concern it to play the game while the clock is still running.

And being that I worked 12 hours per day, I couldn't help but to make sure every minute was financial driven to maximize every opportunity possible.

This idea is what one of the last customers wanted to explain to me as we were heading to his destination. Time was money, and with the meter running he said that it made him nervous. I said why, he said that it's because it seems that its constantly taking money out of his pocket and he for once don't have control over his expenses.

I told him I can turn the meter off, but then it would be a fix fee. He asked how much, I said 40 buck no tip needed. He said cool, he liked that better. Off went the meter.

After the meter went off, the conversation turned friendly and the mood was much better. So I asked him. I said a guy like you living on this side of New York probably don't have any issues with money.

He said that life was good, but only if he can control time and costs. So, then I started to dig, especially since he mentioned something that sounded like overhead disclosure. This is the type of communication is the type I like to get into. Especially for the fact that he is a cheapskate and may have a small business set up.

A starter business is something that many may seem to want to just get their feet wet and then proceed from there.

So he told me that he often plays with sport betting. I'm like what? Yeah he truthfully spends his time day in and day out making numerous bets in different likes of athletic gambling. So the whole time I was clueless because he mentioned cutting overhead costs and how time is money etc.

So then I dug a little deeper and had to ask him how does he pick who is going to win? He said he never pick winners, his main goal is picking losers. I was like huh? That's almost the same isn't? He said no, it's easier to lose a game than it is to win.

So me being me, I really assumed that people win money only when there team they choose win. He said yeah it most cases, but you focus on the loser, not the winner. He explained that if you know who is going to lose, you automatically know who is going to win.

Nobody wants to work hard for it, especially when you have 20 year old billionaires that never finished college.

I said ok. He then told me that he gross about 50k per weekend by hedging his bets to while making sure the loser does exactly what the loser is supposed to do, lose.

So I was still clueless, so I asked him do you mean point fixing. He said something like that. I looked at him in the rear view mirror and I was like wait. If you have the scoop who is going to throw the game, then obvious you can make hand over fist day in and day out. However, that can be expensive to the gambler and risky to the athlete.

He said of course and this is why the players make so much money. They are paid huge salaries to not lose the game, not to win the game.

The owners of these sport leagues don't care who wins or lose, as long as the stadium is filled. In order to fill the stadium, they have to make sure the team maintains a winning season, regardless of a championship or not.

So, I asked, how can I get in? He said it's quite pricey to tell people who is going to win, however I can tell you for a cheap cost, who is going to win. That was kind of cool, but then again I said to him that there are point spreads.

He said of course, and that's where the money is made, and how you must pay up to get it. And by the way, if the point spread is not met, you get a full refund of the amount of money you paid for each point.

I thought now, that sounds good, dirty, but good. He gave me his number left me a tip on who may win tonight and by how much. And I swear to god, he was dead on, minus a half a point. I didn't play the bet, but I did keep his number, for the simple fact that gambling can be addictive.

It's a beast that is hard to tame. So make sure if you follow the gambling syndicates, to be sure you can handle this type of play, getting into this market can be quite costly.

While I don't condone gambling, I would like to say if you have insider info in stocks or sports, try to use that to your advantage, but just avoid betting the house on it.

Meeting interesting people in New York was a load of fun. It really seemed that everyone had a story to share, and for the most part the majority came from different backgrounds. Same goals but different missions.

So here I was, going about my daily social life while making ends meet in the business of taxi driving, yet at the end of the day, us drivers still need loving too. This brings me to one of my most recent along with one of my last whales that jumped in to my cab.

It was around October and for the most part people are normally into getting to their Halloween parties and all the fun stuff that comes with the national tradition of dressing up and wearing costumes. Being that I enjoy to have just as much fun as the next, I saw this super-hot lady in this amazing dress that looked like she just came from a party.

The dress was a little short than usual however for the most part I could practically see her from a mile away, yet nobody bothered to pull over and pick her up. So I took advantage of the opportunity. Money, tip or no tip, this was something I wanted in the back seat.

So I pulled over and asked if she need a lift, and to my amaze, she jumped right in. Smelling like heaven, looking like princess, yet dressed like thunder, I had to ask of course where ya heading. She said she just came back from a Halloween party and need to go to the Manhattan hotel.

Now, first thing I though was heck, I just picked up a freaking call girl, and she may be waaaay too far out of my price range.

So I kept plugging away just to keep the conversation going, I asked her how she like's New York? I wanted to try to avoid asking what she did for a living being that I didn't want to embarrass her. She said she love it, but is here for work. I was like ok. I asked how is business.

She said that she is expanding and wanted to get bigger. Now being that I can have kind of a perverted mine, I had to pop the question. I said what do you do for a living? She said that she does online media buying and sub contact work for large advertising companies.

I was like huh? That made no sense to me. So I was first distracted by the fact that she wasn't a call girl, and as she continued I can tell that her accent and vocabulary sounded quite educated.

So I dug a little deeper and I said so what does an online advertising person or broker do in your line of work.

She explained how she is the middle person between social media companies and sprite or Nike. I was still a little bit taken a back because the first thing I kept thinking was, why would they use you, being that they can probably go directly to the source. This when she explained that yes they can perhaps go directly to the source however the time and the effort it takes to bid the right costs for the right traffic can be a larger loss than gain.

She mentioned that her business runs on positive accurate information and that she delivers quality versus quantity. I was like ok, I can see that quality versus quantity means a lot in some businesses but, I wanted to know more.

I mean after putting two and 2 together I had to figure that with her going to the Manhattan that she was going to meet her husband. I mean the costs to get into the Manhattan was something close to a million dollars per year. I asked if she was married, she said she was divorced, and that she had to leave him because he never liked to work. I was like wow. But she said didn't want to talk about him. So I said, so how much money does a person like you make per year.

She smiled as if I was getting to personal, and I was, I mean she decided to share her personal life with me, so why not. She told me she can't give out figures but, said that she does fine. And of course she does. She staying on the 15th floor of the Manhattan.

So then she smiled a little more because she can see that I was desperately curious, and I am not too bad looking. So she said if you can land a contract for a major advertising company, you can probably purchase a liquor store, or maybe a new corvette. I was like ok, so about 100k grand.

This was thick. She was thick, I mean the body had me dumbfounded, I didn't but you focus on the loser, not the winner. He explained that if you know who is going to lose, you automatically know who is going to win. know if I should ask for her number or business card, but I wanted both. The phone number first of course.

It was at first kind of hard to believe these numbers she gave me, but being that we are heading to a top level 5 star condo means she is definitely getting it. Also, Mark Zuckerberg is making billions from paid users, he makes his billions from advertisers. When we say billions we mean billions. His net worth is close to $40,000,000,000.00. Yeah, that is a big number!

So, we continue the flirt on the way home, and I continued to be distracted by her short skirt. Trying to hold a conversation in the rearview without crashing became difficult due to the fact that she wasn't wearing panties.

So yeah, I was quite distracted, she was 27 and single as a dollar bill. So my next move as we arrived to her destination was to figure out how to play it. I mean, I don't want this girl to leave my yellow bus without getting the digits.

So I politely asked, how can I contact her. She gave me her business card that also had her cell number and other contact info. One that stood out like a sore thumb was LinkedIn. She said send me a message, and she would get back.

I really wanted to go up to that room, but I assume my game was off, and your game would be too if you met a woman that was super-hot and made more in one month than I did per year. I mean, I am a taxi driver. Why would someone on her level want with a dead beat blue collar cat like myself. I kept thinking, as I was driving to my apartment at the end of the night how I want a girl like her one day.

I kept her card in my wallet.

So there is one thing to learn from all of these confessions. It really doesn't matter exactly what line of work you do, as long as you do it well. Almost each niche has the potential to make millions, it just depends how you scale it and what's your angle.

From peanuts, to gambling, there is always a way to start with nothing and make it into something, and not just something but millions of dollars.

THE SECRET TO MAKING MONEY

Communication is by far the strongest element needed to succeed. Millions of people have discovered that inheriting money is nice, yet being able to sustain wealth is another challenge. If you don't have the right formula to do it, you will quickly discover how fast you can become broke.

Opening your mouth and conversing is the key to everything. You must be able to take good notes, identify the notes along with separating the good and bad in order to use the right strategy. Yes, many people may have the tools, yet may not have the driving alpha spirit it takes to win in the world of capitalism.

Let's take Mc Donald's CEO Steve Easterbrook for example. He was not even on the job 6 months before the company did a 180 degree turn around. Why? Because he was strong enough to take a risk in an area 99% of all business were afraid to challenge.

He was strong enough to take a risk in an area 99% of all business were afraid to challenge.

He quickly approved Mc Donald's 24 hour breakfast menu. With a 24 hour breakfast menu it allowed quarterly earnings to gross in numbers that has been seen in years. This was done because the previous CEO was too scared to take the risk. Managers company-wide seen the demand yet upper-level management did not want to think outside of the box and risk failure.

He won! He is now the MVP of the business world and is respected by all top level fortune 500 company leaders and CEO's.

Taking a risk is important as long as if it's the right one. However when you see the look on people faces when the miss the 10:30 cut off for a sausage egg mc muffin or a bacon cheese egg biscuit sandwich with hash browns, it's important to take note. Steve Easterbrook knew this, and he dove right in in order to save the company and also make millions of dollars even after the increase in minimum wage.

The reason why I brought this up is because there is a recent contrast example for people can take a look at the difference between successful people that is meant to be good leaders and the one's that aren't like Don Thompson.

Being able to see the difference is important. Yes many years ago Mc Donald's was in a different competitive environment and needed to adjust its framework in order to ride the wave.

We just thought we share a great example of what it's like to have the blood of a millionaire versus the blood of a thousandaire.

The best will rise to the top, if the right tools are there. So what tools would you use? I suggest using the tools (strategy) that is going to get you there the fastest. Once you make your first 100k grand it's going to be twice as easier to make a quarter of a million dollars. From that point the world is yours.

The only way you're going to be able to get there of course is thinking smarter working less and using a strategy that makes big dollars. Are you that one?

We will cover a few of these strategies in the next chapter but I want you to ask yourself a question. Are you willing to do anything it takes to make millions? Are you willing to say anything and everything needed to make a million dollars? It is critical to understand that when you are in the biz of making money that you must use your mouth to get you there. Yes, you want to use your head more than that however when starting off, your mouth is all you got.

You must own this. You must know and understand that smooth talking smooching and everything it takes to vocally make money is what it's all about.

In fact we have a couple of good example. Let's look at a music artist. A music artist uses his or her mouth on a daily, weekly, monthly and yearly basis to make money. Do you want to make money like they do?

I mean they make thousands and millions of dollars per year using their voice. Why, how? It's simple. They make their vocal cords sound like heaven. The message is what supports the sounds that comes out of their mouth. People buy it even though they know it's not real. Music makes people feel good whether it's real or not.

From this point on you must think of yourself as a musical performer. I know what most are thinking regarding singing, but we are not talking about harmonizing or having some instrumentals in the background. However, you must sing your assets off as if you are singing in front of 100k thousand people every day or like you are on American Idol. Yes, your voice is your key to these millions until you're so rich that you can delegate your voice to other singers.

The best voice stays rich and would always sell out concerts as long as the voice is good. Several record labels would try to sign the artist to other million dollar contracts if they are willing to take the money.

Own this title!

The meeting your millionaire goal solely depends on how you sound and how you deliver your message. Can you deny that this not like music artists? Selling and convincing people to do things for you is no different.

So we hope you have a good idea of what it's like to perform at the very top every day. This is extremely important in order to push your money making skills to the highest possible performance every day. Your mouth piece needs to be made of gold, not of needy. People can smell desperation or needy from 5 miles away, so that won't work.

There are some great Wall Street movies to watch. Those examples can provide some good audio samples on how critical your vocal cords need to be. A perfect 10 at all hours of the day.

So now you have an example of how important your mouth piece needs to be, we have found that when most people are on their toes patient and not over relaxed, they perform the best. This allows you to be conscious smart, mentally and physically focused on your day-to-day aspirations.

CHAPTER 9:

IMPLEMENTING A BUSINESS STRATEGY

---

We provided some pretty good confessions of guys that have incomes in excess of 500k per year, the only challenge is at times it takes time to get to this level. So we fully understand that using their strategy to get there immediately won't work for all. Their stage in business changes as they are able to delegate or hire someone to grow their business more.

So for this final chapter we are going to discuss some ideas and steps on how to start off on a decent business niche that you can come up with and implement that affordable and also how to start a strategy that will allow you to grow into a millionaire.

So we already earlier spoke about the niches and your mouth piece, but then you really need a business plan. A business plan is something that all businesses need in order to insure your goals are met after your expenses and other obligations are fulfilled.

Putting together a business goal is something you do after you have decided on a business niche to go into. This is also what you do after you have done your research and homework on the marketplace. For example if you decide to sell lawn care products yet you live in a desert environment like Arizona or Las Vegas the chance for success is not going to be good, so make sure you find the right niche and the right market place to start your business.

So putting together your plan needs to be completed after you have done other pre-business steps in advance.

So take a moment, sit down, and write down at least 5 business ideas to consider. Out of the 5 business ideas you have speak to friends and family about the ideas. After you have spoken to them go online and make sure these ideas are at least in the ballpark on realistic achievable goals.

Try to stay away from super high risky business ideas like stocks or gambling. While the payoffs can be enormous the probability of succeeding is slim.

Be realistic on what you want to pursue. Try to stay away from super high risky business ideas like stocks or gambling. While the payoffs can be enormous the probability of succeeding is slim.

While scheming is not the safest idea in terms of business practices, it's important to be aware of what makes the world go round. Certain markets can only survive unless you are getting over on someone. We say getting over it means taking money from the desperate and giving it to your pocket.

This happens in a lot of business. Sub-prime business are known for these type of practices, however they are also one of the industries that are heavy regulated due to over exposure and predatory issues.

Getting over on someone is going to happen, it just not morally right to do it in a way that preys on the weak. We don't condone this and will not expect you to either however it's important to be aware of the difference when first stepping in and getting your feet wet in a business or strategy.

We know your ambition, and being that it's to become a millionaire, it says a lot about your spirit and mindset. From this point on take every second serious and plan each day and each hour with the end game to making it BIG.

I want to thank you for taking the time with Millionaire Confessions. We will more than likely send you some other tools that are useful to insure your daily monthly and yearly goals to becoming successfully wealthy.
